The toy in the tree, who shouted: "Bemember what you say now, Fernando—you will have to stake to that," understood his weakness. Fernando put on the robes of a native, but there were few attiand having acknowledged his pest pollit robes of a patriot, but there were few silly enough to believe he would wear them any lon-ger than it suited some one of his selfish motives. That motive was revealed when, with the heart of a traitor and face of a saint, he took a seat in the Union Defence Committee, and, by one of his eleverest jokes, relieved its fund of 367,000, contributed by patriotic cita-sons to sid the Government. Fernando got this money to raise and equip the Mozart regi ment. Some persons have been malicious enough to say that a very considerable amount of stuck to Fernando's fingers. We never have. The transaction was one of Mr. Wood's best lokes, the point of which the houset members

The last and most magnificent joke in Fernando's role is the one he has just been attempting to play off in New York. Power means profit with him; and he is just now andly in want of both power and popularity. Hence he sets himself up as the great apostle of peace, and gathers about him those who are always ready to shout when he enters the ring. In his great political peace meeting he fancied he had really got something that would astonish the nation and the nation's President. But sensible people in Washington and New York did not want to be told that Fernando had only got making. So eager was he to astonish Mr.
Lincoln with the magnitude of the thing he had up a great political smoke from fire of his own on hand that he posted off to Washington by the first train to exhibit it. But the smoke had all vanished before he reached the Capital, and there was nothing left but the hold outline of the joke he was attempting to palm off on the country. Mr. Lincoln had too keen a sense of the indicrous not to appreciate to the fullest the real object of Fernando's visit, and it is re-ported that he enjoyed the joke himself.

Mabon, better known to the literary wite as " Adjective General McMahon." This gentle-man served him in the capacity of speech-writer and grammarian. He had previously edited an anti-slavery paper in Binghamton, New York, Nor. His political life seems likely to end in where he has a wife now living. Believing his the same role. His ambition to have a political genius, political and literary, was not approing of his own, and he the cleverest clown in clated in a country town, he moved to New it, frequently finds him performing before an andiance ready enough to cheer the actor for ble soites, but incapable of appreciating the perming of his tokes. The city is filled with rumors that a large robel force has crossed the Rappehanuock, and is moving up towards the Valley. This is believed, by some, to be the advance movement of Lee to reach the Valley by way of Thornton's or Chester Gap. The robel force repulsed yes-terday at Middletown may have "gone before"

One thing is very certain: the greatest acvity prevails in both armies, and we should not be surprised at any moment to hear of a battle, for it is very certain that Gen. Booker will not permit Lee to move far in any direction without attacking him.

The Democratic State Convention lately assembled in Ohio must have been a queer affair. The Democratic party in that State is evidently demoralized. To say nothing of the Coppercadism of Vallandigham, it is unprecedented in Ohio to nominate a candidate for Governor and also one for Lieutenant Governor from the same locality.

Vallandigham, living at Dayton, has received the Democratic nomination for Governor, and Pugh, living at Cincinnati, only forty miles distant, is nominated for Lieutenant Governor. Both these candidates are southern Ohioans, and the middle and northern portions of the State are unrecognized. In ordinary times this would have been deemed the policy of insanity y the Democratic leaders in Ohio.

It is plain that the convention was controlled untirely by that crazy person, George E. Pugh, and wound up-its proceedings with the donkeyish feat of carrying him off on their shoulders. It is a matter of historical record that no convention that was controlled by Pugh ever suceeded in attaining its object at the polls.
